

he go. Well, that's a true story, I seen that. He's got his black his black handkerchief off and there was a fire in there. Blaze, you know that fire blaze. He throw that handkerchief in that fire and it shot like a gun. And after while there flash a brand new black handkerchief. On top of that fire. He grabbed that and he put it on his neck. Was a brand new one. Now, I saw that. Now what he friend to is he got a greatest power he got.

(How did he get his power?)

From a snake.

(Was he a Kiowa?) (Mr. Haumpy is hard of hearing and doesn't respond.)

He got string out of his mouth, it was shining with over a hundred needles sewing needles. He pull that string out and all stringing there, you know that needles. He pull it out, it was shining. He says, "My grandson, that's what I know. That's what I know. Anybody swallow a needle, accident, I get it out. I don't care where it's at. I get it out. Can't choke." Some of the ladies, they put the needle in their mouth, try to thread it fix the thread. Well, they get it out and thread it, but sometimes (makes inhaling sound)--swallow needle. "I can see through the body," he says. He says, "If you swallow needle--" You know, the white doctors they have to X-ray you to see that needle, where the needle at, but this grandpa he says, I can see through there where the needle at." He says, "I can reach and get the needle out. I'll suck him, suck it in my mouth. Take it out." Or you know, that peace-pipe, that stem pipe stem, he said "I can get the pipe off, get it out of there." (makes sucking motion with pipe stem.)

STORY OF MAN WHO WAS A FRIEND OF THE THUNDER:

In that time that about two hundred years ago, maybe more, that's a lot of things there that's a lot of stories. They friend to this--when it rain, thunder shower, when it's rain, you know thunder, one fellow is friend to him, that thunder. One time they were way camping there. They were camping edge of woods so they could get wood. They camping by creek somewhere, but river,
