

them, and keep it like I think my grandpa would have done. But we don't know too much about this old way. True, we have four different ways. These other two are abolished. litidie and I forget name of other two. Manatidie was one of the main ones (old warrior societies). We try to piece together knowledge and find respectable way to run this program. The staff bearers and the whip man--these peoples have the knowledge and the wisdom and the courage. And that's the way the respective tribes look at these fellows--as a leader. That's why there's a few copies (of the whip, staffs, etc.). At give ways they throw money by these guys but they don't touch them. That's the way they honor these people, show respect. I've changed a lot of the ways (of the B.F. Society), like reciting a war honor every-time they drop something from their costume. These costume items get old and wear out, and it's boring to have this every-time something comes off. But if a staff should some way drop, that's the time to have someone that's had combat to come out and talk about honor.
