

and they took ribs and they took one whole side of a hog. One whole side. He call his hired hands to come and pick them up and put them in a box. They said it was kind of a little cool, it wasn't too hot that day, it was cool. Nice Nice pretty Fall year. It was beautiful. But then they had a box made, they put all that meat in a box, and they all went over there and all the childrens, they all ready in the tally-ho, they all ready. All the sisters was except this father and those two sisters. They were still over there. They got those hired hands and they put everything, and they all wave and said goodbye, we might meet again someday. So they all left. Just like a whole army going. They went on back home. Then after they left, well this table and everything cleaned. Everything was out, and all those womens were taking those dishes and get them cleaned up and all the rest of the Indians had gathered there to help. They cleaned it up, everything. And they start putting the dishes back on the table. All of them. So all them tables, all them Indians got on there, the white people and there was about one table that was left over, he said, "Maybe some other people might come. This table will be ready for the rest." They that fed, I'd say my grandfather, besides 700 children and sisters and two fathers and about 8 hired hands that's how many he fed from the school. And that was there about 400 or 500 visitors. White people and Indians. Comanches, Kiowas, Apaches, Caddo, Wichita, Delaware. They were all come down there. They come on down there and there's was about, I'd say all together, there'd be about between 15 or 16 hundred people there. So he fed that many people. That very day, and there was still meat and other stuff left over there. That's how much people my grandfather feed at that time. No one else among the Indian people in Oklahoma or anywhere else has ever fed that many school childrens, plus the father. And he had a big history written on that. Bit history but I don't know, we can't find it. I don't know where it's at. Couldn't find it. So after everything was over, had all the feast and everything, well then my grandfather went over there and he ask those
