

But if he picks up the ball then I'll know it's a girl." So she put those two traps to catch, whatever which one it could be. Went to work again somewhere-whatever work she doing. She went on back. Well, this little boy, just a certain time he goes down there. Come on back down there and he went on in that. He peeked in there first, he don't go in there all at once. He peeks and looks to see if there is anybody in there. When it's clear then he'll go in there. So he goes in there and he looks around and the first thing he do is went over there and see the food and he eat that stuff, then he look around and he seen that boy and arrow here and this ball here, so he went over there and picked up the bow and arrow. So he ran out and he left because his mother was over there, already done bloated and busted, but he still there with him his mother. He stays around there, you know. Don't go away. So he ran out and he left. So this old lady came in that evening late again and she went over there and seen that the bow and arrows was gone. She said, "Oh, I'm glad, I'm happy," just clapped her hands and said, "I'm glad and happy that it's a little boy. Now the next thing is how I'm going to catch him. How I'm going to catch him. That's the next thing, how I'm going to do it. I have to figure a way to catch that little boy." So then after that he studied how to catch him. So he, lets see, he turn himself into something. Yeah, he turn himself to a rock. This old lady just right by the door. After the boy pass that you see, he'll turn himself to woman again and catch him, see. He turn into a rock and he sit him right there by the door, right in there. So that little boy he look in. Coming there and look in and pretty soon he jerk back and said, "Here you are, right here close to that door." So he run. That old lady become woman again. She said, "I don't know what I'm to do with him. How I'm going to work it to catch him. (Charlie confers with his wife.) And then the next time, the old lady went and just about the time he comes in, he turn himself to a little log, little log. Turn herself into a little log and layed herself way over there. So here come, you could hear that.
