

lady. He stayed around with him. He fixed another bow and arrow and then he fixed a wheel, a round wheel and he told that boy, "Remember this, grandson, I'm going to make you this round wheel and I don't want you to throw it down the wind. Don't ever throw it down the wind. Always throw it against the wind. If it's winding this way, throw it that way. But don't throw it down the wind. Don't throw it. Don't do that. If you throw that wheel down the wind, it will fall way down there. There's a big ditch down in there, it'll fall down there and there's a man living down there, living there and he kills people, he eats people. If you go down there he will kill you and eat you up. So that's why I don't want you to throw that wheel down that wind." So this little boy, he's smart and he something like, they call in them days a god, you know. Because he's wise, he knows everything. Smart. And he come from heaven down.

(Does he have a name?)

They call him--half boy. In between. And then this boy said, "Well, I don't think that man will be greater than I am. I'm better than he is. He won't get me. I'm not afraid of him." So one day his grandmother went to work and he told him, Be sure and don't throw that wheel down the wind." That day it was winding hard down the wind. He throwed it, you know, and that boy went after it. Went after it and that thing went on down the wind. It went down in there. You see, when that wheel went down there, that boy went down there after it to pick it up and that wheel up there, it fell and it hit that boy right in the middle of his head and it become twins instead of one. That's two boys. And right today they got that medicine around here at James Silverhorns. That medicine that was brought from that. They still got it today. They call it--I hear of it. Splitted them in half, when that wheel fell right in the middle, right here. Split them in half. Made two instead of one. So there was two boys now instead of one. And they have that medicine bag down there representing that boy. Today Jim Silverhorn got it.

(Is that what they call the grandmothers?)

Yeah grandmothers. These two boys they went on down there to the place. The
