

they took her and they went on and they said it was along about a little after noon, which she said. This was her own story. She said that when she and the girls get over there where the plum patch was, well, right in there they was plentiful. Them plums was just red and just nice you know. The tree plums. They said they'd jump on one tree to another. Saind, this ones good and that's good and that's good. And they kept a going in deeper in the patch. So finally that sun was going down. And when it went down it got dark quick over there, because mountains up there and hills up there made it--made the shade dark quick, because the sun went over those mountains and hills. So they all got--And it kind of got foggy like. All at once it got foggy like and it got dark. So all these girls, they run off from her. From my grandmother. They run off, so my grandama right there she start searching around, hollering around, seeing where the rest of the girls was. Nobody talked. Nobody spoke to her. So she went on. She went on through there and instead of going back toward the camp, she were going further away from the place where they camped--where they were at. So she kept a going, she kept a going. Finally, she got lost. She got lost and she went on straight on further west. She went on further west, way down in those gullies and down into those swamp. She got into swamp and gullies. And she go in there, you know, and so the daybreak came and she went and looked around and she couldn't find her way back to the camp where she was. So she went on further. She kept a going, she kept a going. So finally it came to a second day--well the next morning, she went on further west. Instead of going east where the camp was she went on further. And she was getting hungry and thirsty. And she couldn't find no water in there.

ALTAIDL GETS HELP:

So the third day, the third day came, there was some people she said came in the night. In the night time they came to her and when they would talk
