

Yes, they call it "tally - ho" like a hay-frame wagon. They call it that. All right, when they got the childrens--I think there must have been over seven-hundred and something, plus the workers you know. There was that many children--about 700--and the rest of them were workers and Sisters and the two Fathers. They were there. So they got there in the morning and we all got up. We all got ready and we got in these talley-hos and wagons and everywhere we can get in there. We left from that school and went on. That morning they took us over there. And when we got over there--we must of got over there 'bout eleven something--at that place. So, out there in the open they had lot of shade trees, you know, out there in the open. Had a lot of shade trees. So they had these long tables--I don't know how many tables they had.

(End of Side A. First 3 or 4 minutes of Side B is blank.)

So we got there and the table was already set, and when they got there, my grandfather--he come out there to Father--Father Isidore. He greeted him. Welcome. to get off, and to bring all the childrens and all of the Sister's all of 'em to come on. The table was ready. Ready for all of them. Ready to serve and eat. So we all got out and we got in double file, you know, school rules. So the Sisters got us all together there, and they had a table set right in the middle of all them other tables for Father Isidore and for his other Priests and for the Sisters and his workers. There were tables for them. So, the rest of them tables there were for children. So we got out and we came on and Father and them they got to their table and they all got ready and they were standing there and we all got ready to sit down. So we all stood up until everyone was there. All the school children--to the last school kid. And when we all got there then we were ready, all then my grandfather, he went and told Father Isidore that he had a few words, that he wanted to tell, that he said, "I am doing this," he said, "what I am doing here for you and your school and your
