

Browning. We stayed all night over there. We stayed all night there, and the next morning we paid for that--these Indian people ran that kind of a trading post--a filling station and everything there. A village, It's kinda like a one-room apartment. It's a house. You just--course, it's got everything in there. And they tell us not to go out at night time. There's bears that come around and raid on these garbage barrels. They said don't do it, unless you step out and get in the car quick. Cause we were right in the mountains, then. So next morning we just told that fellow that we'd leave our stuff there. And we took everything out, and we start. It opened up over there at Immigration on this side at seven. Same way on the Canadian side. That's about a mile wide. Seems to me like "no-man's-land." They got a fence. Yeah, they got a fence. On our side and on their side. And it's a mile in between there. Course, they got some kind of a wire fences--kinda like a crossed wood, you know--all wires. We went through our side easy. We got on the other side, and boy, I tell you--you have to go through almost torture before you get a passport over there! Take fellows like us--no, they don't furnish--Well, when I was born, well, old ladies took care (delivered) me. I didn't have no birth record. Of course I did have at the Office (Anadarko Agency Records). Don't have no birth certificate. Also Old Man and John Fletcher. Of course the Canadians didn't know it, but they just want to press and push their authority. We didn't mind it. We just want to see those peoples. So, the Old Man left his car title there. On the other side with (Canadian) Immigration.

(With the Canadian immigration authorities?)

Yeah. So they ask us how long and how much money we were carrying, and what we gonna do, and what we were going for. Course we had to go in their office and explain. I think they were suspicious. So we told them we good Indians from Oklahoma. We're not no spies. We don't know how to be spies! In meantime, they were going through our car. We had our car parked out of the way. Boy, they were going through it like a rat going through the house. Yeah, we didn't kind of like that.
