a the church, they loaded the body on about eleven-thirty. Train left about twelve-ten. Her sister was on that train. They took the body out. So they called me about two days . after that. Day after tomorrow from that date, she called -- the burial will be at Colorado Springs cemetary. And they had a grave dug so we got a friend of mine to drive us and another friend of mine and his wife, and the four of us, we went up there. Stop at Pueblo for that night, and next forning we go to Colorado Springs and we took a room there in the hotel there. My sister-in-law wanted us to come to the house, bu' I told her, "Me, we go a room here. Girls want to clean up." "Well they tan clean up at the house." "jell, hey just wa to shop around." You know Colorado Springs has got a lot of swankplaces, curio stores and all that. She said, "Al right. I'll call you about 11:30 to come and ear dinner with us." So I told the girls to be there, be around a little af er eleven so when she called we can go up there and eat at her house. They got an eleven room home here. Nice home right there at Cheyen e Canyon. Well, she called us. She asked me if she could send a car. "No," I said, "We'll go up there in our own car." So that afternoon at two o'clock is when they buried her. They had a bronze casket. It cost $2800. And they had these cranes, you know, to sink the caske down. And even the lid had to be set down with a crane. But she's buried there.

(How old was your wife?)

She was forty-three whe she died.

(that age was she when she got that injury from the horse?)

on, she was—t was eleven years before. She's going to school. She had finished high school and college at Denver and she came home and she was taking a correspondence course in medicine from some institution back near Chicago or somewhere. But she worked out curing the day, you know, at lander. And of course she was helping the his torical division there in lander, ayoming on the northern Indians. But they always come home in the evening. She ust have been about twe ty—ine—somewhere along in there. Then she went to school after the —went to Los angeles—journalism school, that writer—what's him name?—Emory—? The went to school under him. And she went to school with ano her one, and her woran woman in journalism. I got some of her writings here. They were Denver friends of hers.
