

of these people are living around in the tribe now. And Tom's great-granddaughter is married to my grandson. They're living in Nevada now. And my grandson's children are up there with him and one of the boys living with my daughter here in Lawton. Going to school at Lawton High. And Frank Campbell--some of his children--the boys are living in Oklahoma City, and some are in Lawton and other places. And George Campbell, he just had one boy and he's living in Lawton. And he's connected with that--what do you call 'em? A hearing aid business.

STORY ABOUT CATTLE RUSTLER CAPTURED FROM INDIAN POLICE AND HANGED BY COWBOYS

(Well, you said the government had to take these people out. Well, how did they get back?)

Some of them get back the same night! In the dark! And they go open other places. And they put them off three or two times, and they come back. They fine them, but they come back. Well, one man been put off several times. But he kept coming back and cattlemen was making complaints against him. And finally they got him and they was to try him--take him to--I think they going to have a court with him in Denison, Texas or somewhere in Texas. And the Indian Police arrested him. And the United States Marshal, Jimmy Jones, was in charge of the Indian Police then. And they were escorted him to court in Texas. And of course, there was no roads and no trails. And this is what one of them policemen tell me. This man that I said was police, Captain Sankadoty--he's the one that tell me about it. He said they was taking him, and he was handcuffed. And they was leading him on a horse, going to Texas. Going straight down Cache Creek. I don't know how it was
