

yards. Two on each side. Or three on each side, or more. Just without bows. Just throw them (like a javelin). They have a target post standing there. Then they bet on them too. That's a man's game. Then they got a wheel they shoot at too. And then there's a lot of different kind of games.

Well, the wheel game is a plaited dogwood--limber. It's somewhat like a tamborine but it's got rawhide strips, squared off both sides. And then they roll it fast and they shoot at it. Shoot at it. So many arrows crossed.

(Roll it on the ground?)

Yes. One fellow throw it fast. And while it's going, you have to shoot it. And then the stick game, too, they throw at that, too, with a lot of bows. You find those arrow games like that.

And these police got lots to do. They're on the duty all the time. And if they see any white people among the Indians' village somewhere, or gambling, they're supposed to go get them and bring them in and take them to the Agency and have a court. Gambling with the Indians. In my time, I have to get some of them. I have arrested them. You see, after the opening they were still forbidden to gamble with the Indians. But they do. White people wasn't allowed to gamble on the reservation with the Indians. And they warn them by signs everywhere, that they're not to gamble with the Indians or they would be arrested. Yet they do it anyway! Just like not selling whiskey. And I caught many of them selling whiskey to the Indians. We caught many of them.

BETTING

(Well back when they were playing these arrow games--just the
