

They don't show us nothing. They just have to lay on a bed. And we had tables but not like that.

(Where did the Kiowas get their furniture when they first started?)

They didn't get no furniture. They just buy lumber and make--what you call it? Legs. There's where they make a bed and lay. That what my brother make. We all had bed like that. We don't--Just somewhere--nineteen or something--I can't remember-- If you tell me that, I think about it. And so it's not very long-- We have furniture since they make town over here, Mt. View. But they don't buy furniture. Just a while back they buy this kind.

(Did they make tables and chairs?)

Yeah. They learn. You know the missionaries--mission. . . . just like J. J. Methvin. Another one at Mt. View, named Mr. Hick. She tell them. When they have sewing meeting, his wife come and she tell. She know how to cut the pillow cases, and use the pillows, and underslips and slips, and T-towels, and everything. She sew them. Now where they learn it? By white people! Now this time they just like white people. But way back, they don't know.

(What kind of furniture did they have in a tipi?)

Fire, wood. Make wood. In a tipi make bed up there. They make a hole inside. Put the wood in there, and they burn it. It's warm. They cook in there. They got some kettles and coffee pots. They boil coffee, and boil-- and they got Mexican oven. And they make bread. Oh they smart beside!

(What kind of oven?)

Mexican oven. (Dutch Oven) You never did see that? I got one, but I never did know where it go to.

(Could you tell me what it's like?)
