

listen (to) it.

(Did your mother go to the Ghost Dance?)

Yeah. They dance. I told you they like to dance. Old people sure like to dance.

(Where did they have that Ghost Dance?)

Other side of Carnegie.

(Did they ever have it any other place?)

No, same place.

(Well, when she went to it, did they camp over there?)

They camp. All over. There's a whole group camped there. They sure like to-- Now it's now on, now. When they dance somewhere their whole camp go and camp around. But we don't go that kinda stuff. We don't go. We don't never go see. No. (Pause) One time I was sitting over here and I sang a war dance song. I was singing. I was just singing. And maybe Paul came. Quick as the door was opened I looked up and he was dancing over here. He's war dancing. Paul does. Oh, he sure make me laugh.

(I want to ask you another question. When you got married to your first husband, did your parents arrange it for you, or what happened?)

What--what?

(When you got married, did your parents have anything to do with it, or did you just off with him and get married?)

Yeah, we got married when I first--(Unintelligible phrase) Oh, he can't get me too quick! He try to get and (unintelligible word) me. I don't want him. I just run away from him. No. He just kept following me and after a while he got me. So I got married with him.

(Then did you have any kind of ceremony or anything?)
