

feathers--all kinds of feathers. I don't know. Fix you up and then you're all right again.

(Is there any kind of medicine they make you take?)

No, you don't take no kind of medicine. Just cedar and fans and stuff like that. And sometimes they suck you with their lips. Get that pain out. Sometimes you have it in your head or shoulder. When they get that thing out, sometimes it be a fingernail or skin or some dried meat or something like that. That spirit, you know, shoots you with that. But they have Indian doctors for that and they fix you up. But they're all died out now. They have to take them into peyote tipi now to cure them.

(How do they do it now?)

They take them in the tipi. We got some mens yet, but they're not as good doctors as way back there, but they can doctor. Eat your peyote and then -- they'll suck you with a horn or something.

(Do people still get this kind of sickness?)

Once in a while you see somebody that way. Not very long ago there was a woman back west here. She was staying in the house by herself, and heard a noise and just got scared and turned around quick and then got that way. Those things will get youk like a noise or something like that. When you're in the house by yourself or somewhere by yourself, just pretty soon all at once something just back here in the back just might touch you or something. You get scared--chills--I don't know what you call it. They say that's when the spirits get close to you. Try to touch you but they can't.

(Can they cure it then, once they get this way?)

Yeah.

(What would they do?)

They just take them in the meeting and feed them peyote and then the Indian doctor would suck on them. Sometimes they use a black handker-
