

just once in a while you hear that. But the other sounds, just like this wind, you can--if it's quiet and the wind is coming from about ten or fifteen miles, you can hear that wind coming. Pretty soon it hits on that tipi. Things like birds. You can hear a bird flying come and flying over the tipi. You can hear the wings--I don't know what kind of a bird, but you can hear things like that in there. And in the fire, sometimes one of the sticks will have worms or something like that in there. When it gets to that place, it makes some kind of whistle sound and turns into some other kind of-- And that smoke--you can smell different things in that smoke. You smell it and some other kind of things that are different. It's the same smoke, but you smell different things in it. Sometimes they smell something sweet in there.

(It seems to me from what you're saying that most of these effects are pleasant--the things that you see or hear or smell. Are there ever any effects that are unpleasant? Or depressing or bad to think about?)

I don't think so. It's just in the tipi--you eat enough of that peyote and it's going to-- And your voice will change, too. You'll have a different voice when you start singing. And your action will get faster or something like that. Maybe the blood circulates faster. And every little thing you hear, you just turn around quick.

(I've noticed that, but I didn't know if my effects were typical or not.) Some doctors--we had a government doctor long time ago that said this peyote's good for the blood. It's just like taking them shots they give. They say that peyote's good for that--for blood. Purify your blood.

SOME BAD REACTIONS TO PEYOTE AND EATING TOO MUCH PEYOTE

(Could a person ever have any effects from it that might be sort of bad or unpleasant--make him afraid?)

Well, sometimes they do. When you get that way--get scared--you just get worse. But if you sit there and just think, "Oh, I've just got that peyote effect. It's nothing." Then you're all right. But if
