

the pasture." He got after me. He's afraid of them, but I'm not afraid.

BUFFALO DOCTORS CURE SISTER:

Well, let's see...them Indian doctors, they doctor. One time my sister broke her leg and my mama don't want no doctors to white man doctors, to doctor her. She got Indian doctor. Two of them. Two old man, they come and they--oh, she just be--it just be paoining her and when they put that--it's a buffalo tail that's a fan you know, and they do it, and it stops--the pain went off and they--I don't know how they do but I hear them in there and then four days that girl got up and her foot--them bones were together, it's all healed up. I don't know how they do but I heard them but mama wouldn't let me go in there. Them mens won't allow no womans to go in except mens. (Charlie talks to Lou Ella in Kiowa.)

Lou Ella: That doctors name--and--and two of them. They are the ones cured my sister and she's not crippled. I'm crippled. My sister looks crippled. Broke right here and bones went back. i don't know how they do it.

PAYING DOCTORS:

Well, they have to pay them horses and some goods, lot of goods.

Charlie: Black handkerchiefs and feathers, they give to them.

(How come black handkerchiefs?)

Charlie: It's medicine mostly. That's what they use mostly they pick on that--black, black handkerchief.
