(Did they have any kids?)

Charlie: No. She drinks an awful lot. She drinks a lot. Old Man didn't drink - he didn't hardly drink. He used to, but he didn't drink (implying in later years he didn't drink) - -

(Well, what did your dad do for a living?)

Charlie: That's one thing I don't know. But this old man says he always have everything he need. The Government paid him some kind of a money, but I don't know what it was. But anyway, he always had plenty ever month. And he never want for anything. He always had money. He learn how to sing good in peyote meetings. And they know him. They always say he's got a stone - - rock - - in here, you know, where he'd blow it and put it in here - - medicine. But I never did believe it. I never did. He sings awful good. And he made friends. He worked for Jack Maseet and a lot of these boys, you know - - up to date in peyote meeting ways. He made good friends with 'em. He was awful good singer.

(When did he start going to the Native American Church meetings?)

Charlie: He start going when he was 'about, say, eighteen. Something like that - eighteen or nineteen. He know how to sing peyote songs too. And some songs, he made himself.

(Well, now, when he married all these women, were they legal marriages or were they Indian marriages?)

Charlie: Indian Marriages.

(Was he ever married to more than one at the same time?)

Charlie: Aw, he just marry one - - he'd live with this one and then they'd quit and he marry another one, just like that. Well, it's still goes today. It's still going.

(I know it. Did you live with him very much?)
