

That particular Saturday morning - - well, my dad, his name is plainly speaking, he was just plainly Joe Neido. He wasn't a respected man. He drinks every Saturdays, you know, whenever he gets hold of money, well that's all he want to do. And this particular Saturday morning, he drew a couple hundred dollars and we all went to town and when we park, we lost him, - couldn't find him and we hunted all over town. Finally, I happened to come to the car and he drove up with a colored man. This colored guy, he was carrying him. He was already drunk. I told my dad, "Where you been?" He says, "I been out here with my friend." And I seen he was drunk already and I told him, "My mother's looking for you." So, when I said that, the colored guy, he got off and took off. When he took off, I followed him, you see. I followed him down the street about a couple of blocks. I called the cops. And this stairway where he went up, well, there was another stairway going the other way. So, right now those cops got there and ask me why I called them and I said, "I am suspicion that this guy he got my dad's money. I think he rolled him." So this other guy he ran around to the other entrance where he was supposed to get out and go in this other side is the same way. So, as he was coming down he caught this colored guy, see. When he caught him, well he held him till I got there. So, we took him down where my dad was. My mother happened to come to the car too and asked him where and said, "Now, I want somey to get some groceries." Well, he searched around and he didn't have no money. All the money he had was $25.00 out of the two hundred. So this colored man - - no, it was this colored guy had that $25.00 and that's all he could produce out of the two hundred. So the law asked him, "What we going to do with this colored guy?" He said, "Well go ahead and turn him loose. I wont sign no complaint. It was my own fault by going with him. He's my friend and I don't know whether he took it or somebody took it. I can't prove he took it." Well, he gave me $25.00. So he give that all to / mother and he went in and got us groceries and went home.
