

Mexicans they don't use it. Only thing they use it for, is to make tea when they get sick. Fever or something like that, they make tea.

(Who uses it?)

Mexicans, that's all. They don't use it for nothing else. But Comanches, I don't know what....that Quanah Parker, he's kinda---I don't know where he got a hold of it. But that's where it started, from there, and come across. And in that Kiowa reservation they used it.

(How long ago has that been?)

It'll be somewhere around 1850, something like that---way back there, I guess.

(Well was your father alive at this time?)

Yeah. That time he was young man.

(Was he married at that time?)

No. He got married only about 30, some odd...years old.

(Was this before the end of the Indian wars?)

Yeah. No. After the Indian wars. After everything is just....

(After they were here?)

After they allotted. Give them lands you know. Just issue them beef, and well, cattle, you might say, and stuff like that.

(Did you say--this fellow that you said.....)

Pagadogodl?

(Where did he learn to conduct?)

I don't know where he learned it, but he's the one that run that meeting all the time. And today a lot of them run it---well, not exactly like him, but I run meetin' just like him.

(Oh you do?)

Um-huh. Just...lot of them road mens, they got alot of different ways you know. I don't believe there's any two, that got the same way. They all got different ways.

(Where did they learn their ways?)
