

they was married--so it goes by that. And them days, you know, when they (the Tonkawas) were here, they dance like that. And they wear long shirt like that. Just go below their knees. That's the way they war dance. And they have their sleeve--them sleeve holders--like Stuart (man who resembled Stuart Klinekole, but can't be Stuart because Stuart isn't old enough, jj) right here has got one on. And this guy has got long shirt. See there how he is? But this is Apache boy, I don't know who it could it be--cause he's got that shoes--moccasins-- (Is that the kind of moccasins Apaches used to wear?)

Yeah. That's Apache moccasins. Yeah, I can't tell these others that's drumming. I thought I might get to see my brother in there but he's not there. Cause he drums for them.

(What kind of a dance did you think this was?)

Look like it's a war dance. Yeah. Looks like it's war dance. The way they're dancing just here and there, you know. But the other dance, you stand on the line, you know. Line up and dance (Blackfoot Dance). But the war dance, they just scatter all over. Yeah. This could be taken at Captain's place. They used to have dancing over there. The place is--all the houses are sold now. And I just tell you, (referring to one of the drummers, I think jj) this man, he sure is playing, but he don't look like Apache man. Yeah, I can't hardly tell these others. But by standing sidewise, this man, he sure looks like David Williams. He's Tonkawa man, but he was married to--lately her name was Helen Sunrise.

KIOWA-APACHE RELATIONS WITH TONKAWAS:

(How did the Tonkawas happen to get down here and mix with the Apaches?)

Well, the way it is, there used to be big Apache camp over here at Hatchetville. They always have their Ghost Dance there, and people come every Saturday and Sunday. Monday they all go back home. Well, those Tonkawas come in over there. They was gonna have big dance over there. And they all come here. Them was wagon days, you know. Horseback. They come down here and they all got this dancing and they give away, and finally some of these girls, they got acquainted with
