

and look around under them trees, cotton wood trees, I look and I see some of them piled up over there. It look like a beef. So I climbed up there, I found up there, and somebody killed a beef and they put it up there. Then I took the whole side I guess, the ribs and I threw it out on the ground. My mother said, "What you doing up there?" I said, "There's some beef up here, and somebody put it up here and I throw some on the ground." So she come down there and she cut some of it, and then we took it back over there. Then the same evening we move. We move way, about oh, maybe about 8 miles from this creek here. When we got over there some peoples camping down there already. They get away from that other people. That same people. So we're - we stay there. Then my mother she boil - she try to cook and boil some meat. That beef. Those are pots - they make their own - their own pot full. Those Indians made pot, she got it over there. She fill up with meat and boil it. She boil it and in the morning we have that thing long time. The first time we left it right there by the fire. Because we saw somebody coming way down there. Lot of horse tracks - fast as we can. So when we seen 'im - we see something wrong. He say, you folks get ready. Everybody just run around - untie their horses up there, they bring them in. Then they saddle them up and pack up everything that they want to pack. That man come over here. He stop right there and he says, "Pretty bad," he said, "Pretty bad." He said, "Last night all those young people, those Mexicans coming down here from town with the wagons, just take them people and throw them in the wagon, and take them back to town. Then I seen that on that morning I seen some calvary horses go around that way, they head of us - that way, so you folks better get away from there as soon as you can." So this - soon as we get ready we go. Then when we got back, some of the people coming back down there, they coming back in that town there. One of them said, We - was all - some - everybody drunk. Mexican bring the wagons and just put
