

them in the wagons and haul them to the town. All of them, everyone of them. Just pick them up all over. Everybody they took them up there. He said he's looking up there by himself. He's hiding, that's the reason he see everything. Then they took them back over there. Then they put them into one big house. All of them that same night, put them in one house and lock them up. Then the next morning when they get sober in the afternoon, they get sober and they alright then. Then the soldier, Mexican soldier, by that door there. There's guards on each side, then open that door. He told these men and womans, anybody that wants to try to get away, just run out. Run out and run across that creek. All you can. All of us. Then some of them get away. Just get away, they shot them down, they shoot them. All of them just woman, just like that. They shoot women. Oh, they say just three wagon loads of Indians. They kill all of them out there. He said that's what they done. Then that camp there. Next day, they just, whole camp just cry. They cry - everybody out there in camp. Then in few days, some of them out there, got lost and came back. Then they moved on out in the mountain. They go around - and go around, they move around all the time. They don't stay one place, they just move all the time. When they want to fight they just move close to the big main road. That's why they come to the fighting. They never - when they have a big camp there there's the army - they have a fight. They attack us right there in the camp. So their all scattered all over. Then before they, before this happen, why they all were told the certain place to get together if anything happened. So this thing that happened right there. Then we are took - we are - we got lost like. We going - on the way we get together. Then we didn't have no horses, nothing at all, just take off our blankets on back. So keep on, No guns. Five of us, five of us, my mother and my aunt and my sister and my brother, myself. Two of us, we had no guns. So we
