

house--there's a double log house down there with a hallway that went through there between the two fireplace on each end of the--I can remember seeing the old house before they tore it down.

COOK STOVES AND OTHER FURNITURE - A CLOCK

(Did both the fireplaces serve as your cooking stove and your heating stove?)

No. Well, I guess, they used them for cooking and heating too till the Oak stove--Charter Oak stoves come in you know, wood stove. After I was big enough to remember why they had a cook stove in there. Didn't know what a heatin' stove was though. We didn't have any heatin' stove out there. I know I was--oh, a great big kid I guess, before we got one--was seven or eight years old before we bought a heatin' stove to put in the side room.

(On furnishing their houses, I guess a clock was a prized possession wasn't it? What were those clocks like?)

Well now the kind they bought--that is they had--they had one of these eight day clocks. This was about that tall.

(About two or three feet tall?)

Yes. Two and half feet or something like that and it was--I don't know--it had a light finish of some kind. Then later there was a clock salesman came through the country and they bought one of these that had the days of the month on there. The hand turned every time it come 24 hours why it turned and they gave $125.00 for that clock.

(Do you remember who made the clock? Was it Seth Thomas?)

Well, I expect that's who that was made from. I don't know. I expect them clocks has been throwed in the junk. Now, the Woodalls' kids took the big clock that they bought after I was pretty good sized boy--they taken it upon Big Creek--I don't know which one got it. The old man's
