

them come after you to eat you up." The water commenced to run and get to his side. And then day light come. Daylight come and the water was touching him. It was level with him. This animal want back into the water. He was just laying there. He was helpless. He was tied. He couldn't do nothing. When he went away he said, "When I come back you better be gone!" While he was laying there the sun came up early in the morning. He said there is some people coming to get you. They going to kill you. There's a war party coming to get you. You better get out of here. I am warning you, they're going to be here pretty soon." Well, after he was gone a little while, he just laying there thinking. He heard some noises. He turned around. There was a band--a war party--approaching for him singing their war songs.. He could see them getting ready, putting their war paint on, to charge him. They saw him. As they charged on their horses--a whooping and a yelling and all that--spears going everway--they all charged on him--full speed, horse back, coming toward him. They carried their spears. he thought he was doomed. But he couldn't get up--he was staked down. They got in about 50 yards from where he was before he closed his eyes. Next thing he said they just came right over his head and over his body and they transformed into geese and they lit on the water. That's the first mysterious scene he saw. The warriors wasn't human. They changed to geese. And the war songs and the whooping was geese singing. He looked over there and those geese where getting up. Another reptile --I forgot what kind of reptile it was--two of them came. One of them was the same alligator that it was before. They came. Well, he