

could a bull frog give? And they told them how to paint up when he go to war. And how to paint his shield and what to put on. Certain kind of geese and swan feathers, and all pictures of those fishes and wild animals. They fed him and after they got through feeding him, they kept him there about two-three days and he claimed he was gifted with all this power. He feel free to get up and walk out of the lake and come back in. It was just like going into a house. "All right," he says, "Maybe it's time for you to go back home." His tribe went over there where they staked him down to see if he was still alive. And they said the lake was level full and he was gone. They didn't know if something eat him up--or maybe fire...--anyway they thought something ill happened to him and they'd never see him anymore. They give him up for dead. Went back to the forest. Then this underwater gods, they kept him there for almost a month. The people at home done forgot about him. That had already mourned for him, that he was dead. But Indian recreations and that was still going on, Womans' football games and man's arros and stick game. A lot of people go out--spectators--watch them play. Different things was usual in their camp, all going on. It happened in the after noon when everybody was out in the recreation ground. While the womans was having ashinny game. The men and other people was looking on. The womans was having a shinny game. They heard those, what do you call them?--Whooping cranes? They hear them whooping. Somebody looked up and said, "Hey hear them! There they are! They're coming this way." And every time they would turn around, it looked like they were carry-