

she got all of them running toward the village--they commence to running to the village and in the camp. She went just mad all over the village. Man woman and children--she commenced slaughtering everybody. Just like a real bear. She turned into a bear. She was no more a girl. She was a bear. She slaughtered almost all of them. Everybody got scared and some of 'em ran away and those that's left, she killed everyone of them--the whole village. Then they stayed in camp in one of the tipis. And in the night, when they made a fire--must of have been the fall of the year because they had a fire--this bear-girl asked her dister to bring some wood in. She had hurt her foot and knee and was awful sore. Everytime she would bring wood in, this bear-girl would lay at the intrance and have her sore leg out there. "you touch my sore leg and you are going to die." This girl had to be careful bringing the wood in. Everytime she came in. So after she put the wood in, she walk out to the camp and go all around there crying and mourning. Go way up there on the hill and nobody ain't nowhere. She knows that one of these days she was going to be doomed. Her sister going to kill her. She kept crying. She went out crying and something spoke to her. She kept crying. It said, "I'm going to feel sorry for you. I'm going to sympathize with you. I want you to do this. You go into every tipi and get every needle or some kind of pointed instrument that's sharp like needles--and get every needle you can find. And from the intrance of that tipi where you have been sent to sleep, lay socks every so often --flat rocks--and when you run you step on those rocks. And between there on those sides you put those sharp needles up in row. Pointed up, except where you are going to run. If they step on those, they get away. Don't let her see you put those needles up." So she went around and pick up all the needles in the whole village and set them up. She put those large black stones where she was going to step. "When she get after you and chase you, she is going to step
