

(What about that White Man that you mentioned?)

Howard: I don't know where he belongs, either. I believe that's Apache Ben's father, isn't it?

Ray: Yeah. And there's another one, too--that's Iron Shirt.

Howard: Yeah--he's way back there--Iron Shirt.

Ray: And I don't know--that name probably come from the Spanish using them shirts--

Howard: Well, that next--they call him Iron Shirt. And that name, of course, goes back to the time the Spaniards were here--they had their metal armor and mail--what do they call it? Mail. That's where he got his name--that Apache chief. Of course he goes further back in Apache history, right soon after the Spaniards were here.

(I'm sort of confused--was it White Man you said might be Apache Ben's father?)

Howard: Yes, I thought maybe it might be.

(Did he have a name in Apache?)

Howard: Yes, he did, but I can't recall.

Ray: Who?

Howard: White Man.

Ray: I don't know anything about that. I just heard the name.

Howard: I don't know whether his name's in that Mooney's book or not.

Ray: I think there's a treaty on it--Medicine Lodge Treaty--or Jerome Treaty--one of those.

(Did the Apaches know him as White Man?)

(Interruption. Conversation resumes on pending claims case of Kiowa-Comanche-Apache tribes. Then turns to names of Kiowa-Apaches listed as signing treaties in 19th century)

Howard: They say we're entitled to one-third (of the total claims money)--

Alice: For the whole three tribes--
