

(Was this Red House Saloon?)

She said all she heard was that they been to the Red House.

(That's where they bought their whiskey?)

Yes.

(Was drinking much of a problem back in those days?)

Drinking wasn't too big a prob

(Do you remember--did you go to any of the trials, of people who were whipped or executed?)

She never went to trials. She never went to court.

(She never saw anyone punished for crimes?)

Never did.

(I believe a while ago you said that Willie Montgomery was one of the first white men you ever saw?)

She said it seems like Willie Montgomery were the first white people--

(His family was the first?)

Yes.

(Does she remember the name of his father?)

She said it slipped her mind.

(He was older than you, wasn't he?)

Not hardly. Lish Brown was inter-married.

(Now Lish Brown, as I remember, owned the first store in Wewoka, and later on Jackson Brown and John Brown bought him out. They were no relation, cause Lish Brown was a white man, married an Indian, a Seminole. He was one of the first adopted members of the tribe.)

Yeah, him and Harry.

(Harry married an Indian woman, too, a Seminole?)

Uh-huh.

(Now is there anything in particular she'd like to talk about, about the old days?)
