

has pile of brush in it). Climb up that way. When they start to dance he climbs up, climbs up, climbs up. He shake his foot.

"I'm coming. I'm Indian. I come after you," he said. "Hunh," he said. "Yeah, it's been three days, and I'm about to die now.

I want water. Cut me down. Them rawhides I got all my legs tied up. He's got a big knife and he cut them off. These down here, they can't see up there. Got too many leaves up there. He shake him that way. Fasten (unfasten) his legs, all over. Fasten his legs. Now he gets up. "Sit down--I'll fetch it," he told him.

"You're a young man. Get down. I could pull you down this way.

We got horses (hidden) over here. Your papa wants you. Want somebody to come after you. All right. Now, hold my back." He hold his back.

He walk that way. He takes him down and he lays him right there.

He laid him like that. Unfasten him. Now he gets up and sits down. He said, "I'm feeling better." He said, "I'm starved.

I'm starved. But I want water." He said, "I'll take you over there to where them horses are, and then I go back and kill some Navajo Indians and get their saddle and bridle and then we'll go.

I got some meat up there for you." "All right." He holds him on his back. He takes him back about a quarter of a mile, about half a mile, they said. Now they got to them horses. Now he get a saddleblanket and put him on there. "Here's water here. Drink.

a little bit." He drink a little bit and he feels better. "Here's meat--pounded meat. Don't eat too much. Now you wait here.

I'm going to go. He went up there. Lot of people were outside the Sun Dance. Some laid down to sleep (imitates sound of snoring and deep breathing.). One band of men lay down to sleep. He got big knife. Cut him off right here (probably cut his throat).

And scalp it. He's got long hair. Now he run up to their camp.

He'd hunting their saddles. He got him a little saddle. He just
