cousin we used to play with. We were all same size, you know. (Did your brothers ever play with you?) No, they go their own way. (Said emphatically) we never did play with them boys--just us girls used to play.
(Did you ever make any other kinds of toys besides the tipis and the rag dollsa)
Oh, we used to get them--them sardine cans and we used to wash them and then make a hole in the side where we could tie a string and then drag them around. And then we used to pick up IIttle bones to make them like we were having cows or horses. And we'd put them in them little sardine cans and drag them around. And then we uske to use them leaves--you know them sunflowers? They have big leaves. We used to just break a lot of them and them little flowers that are spread out in'there, we used to use them for beads. We used to make little moccasins. out of thèm.
(How did you make those little moccasins?)
We just, cut them like, we were cutting moccasins, and then sew them on them leaves. That's all, we used to do.
(So you used the leaves to make the moccasinis out of?) "
Yeah. Then we'd paste them little yellow flowers on them to, look like'they were beadwork. We used to make them that way. And these boys used to kill rabbits. And we'd take them and clean them up and cut"them off from the bones and we'd slice that meat. And then we cut little forks and put them on each side and put some kind of--stick--put them across. And then we hang our raw meat up there to dry. And we turn them over and over: The sun would dry them up, you know. That's how we used to make our dry meat. We used to copy from these ald folks.
When they sliced meat they used to hang them up like that, you know.
(What kind of a knife would you use to cut it with?) Any ordinary knife-ma butcher knife. We'd get the folks'. (Did you ever try any cooking?)
Oh, we used to make fire outside and cook them there--barbecue. That's how we used. to cook our meals while we play. (Is that the rabbit meat your brothers brought in?)
