

St. Augustine to the Federal Prison, and he wrote about their prison events and home events. He writes to me and asks me questions, and I write to her in the mail. She gets it in the mail. And she said she just about finished her book, and it's very interesting. I never wrote to her no more. I want a copy of her book after she finishes.

(Interruption)

--winter. Winter. The Winter Black Kettle is Killed. This is summer-- it represents the Sun Dance. When they brought the war bonnet at the Sun Dance. And they came back and they saw on the Sun Dance spot where some people--the army--came over there and fed their horses. And they came over there and they saw corn growing. (referring to one of the pictures in which a corn plant is represented).

(Oh. Now when we start up again, I'd like to just start at this end of it and just move that way. We could just take it year by year.)

Yeah. (Pause as he looks at some of the pictures) This was the summer out close to Greer County, where they was camping. The girls go over there to get water for the camp. And some of the boys meet them there at the camp and flirt with them. And they had a Sun Dance over there so they call it "the Flirting Sun Dance."

(Oh, yeah. I noticed she's got a dot of red on her cheeks--)

Yeah--we'll get them all straightened out. I about forgot most of them. I got to have--study out of Mooney's book. He's got most of our record copied in there so I'll remember them. I'm still after that other book. I might be able to get it--I'm gonna work through the government--see if I can't get their help and get it. (Pause)

(Here's the year Sun Boy died--)

Yeah--that's when Sun Boy died. That was 18- what?

(I think awhile ago you said 1884--)

1888.

(Yeah, 1888.)
