

Yeah, that's the way.

INDIAN LIFE UP AND DOWN THE RIVER

(The Indian's life up and down the river here--)

Well, they'd have a little patch of corn. They never did raise wheat, because they have to have too big a fields, mostly corn was raised. They'd build these log houses and live there. I don't know--they'd raise hogs, cattle and if there's a school near, of course they'd send the children to school. That little school across the river, up there where Cora taught, you know, she had to go to Tahlequah and stay two or three days for something. Then I taught there for two weeks for her--there's quite a few bull bloods back there. And they seemed eager to learn. One little boy had--I don't know what they called it scrofula.

(Scrofula?)

Yes. Well, he had this place on his cheek and had to quit school. He went over there to live, at his daddy's grandpa's and--
