

over there? We ain't got nothing to kill it with." "Well, just look over there one time! Just look over there!" She looked over there. That animal fell again. So they butchered it and they had lots of dried meat. And then a crow came by, and she gave this meat to this crow. She said, "Go over there and drop this fat meat where the people that left us in a cruel way, and you tell them that the children that you left to starve, has plenty to eat. This is part of their meat." He said he dropped that fat piece of meat. It's the meat they call--that's on here, but he (Jay) didn't call it. It's the fattest part. After they slice length, and there's always a lot of fat. He (Jay) didn't call it, but it's called in that story. (In other words, Jay forgot to name the specific piece of meat, and Birdie knew what it was. - J. Jordan) So that's the piece he dropped. And then they said, "Let's go back and see them. Let's go back to them." And so they all went back and camped around back out where they left from. And by that time they already had two red lions for their pets. They had them on each side of the door. And she cooked lots of this dried meat. She had dried it with the fat. And she invited all those people that had come to live with them. She fed all of them. And she said to these lions, she said, "The last one you kill." And she told the leader that come in first in their dugout, she said, "Tell our father to come in last." This girl told these lions and these people. So they told this man to come in last, but they had already told these lions to catch the last man. So after everybody came in, they just tore this man up.

I don't know what kind of lions they were--just lions. He said they just tore him apart. They said, "He wanted to kill us, so we'll kill him this way." So that's all.
