

seat. And then he gets up again and then takes the bucket outside. Brings wood in and puts in on the fire. Then the meeting goes on from then on till morning--till morning, when the woman comes in with her water--breakfast water--I mean, the morning water. That's a sacred ceremonial part. The woman or the mother brings water in and there's a prayer. Everything must be in order. And everybody sit good and attentive. And a prayer is made for the mother--the woman--with her water, and then the water (is) drank. The water gets back to her (after being passed around). She gets up and goes out and on her way out she picks up her bucket and goes on back to the camp or house, and then breakfast comes. She leaves her--probably another water comes in. Then the corn and the fruits, and the meat last. They bring that in and set it down. Then she comes in and she can sit down anywhere she wants to. She participates in that breakfast. Then when after a while she sits down, the chief sings four songs. The fourth one is the Quitting Song. And after the fourth song is sung, then they take the sacrament--the peyote--off the altar, and say, "We're quitting now. We're going to eat Breakfast, now" and then you can do anything you want to, then. Give yourself a little lunch, if there's somebody, say like your brother-in-law sitting over there, he might say, "I'm going to pass this piece of meat and this corn to so-and-so. He can take it to my sister." And he goes over there and gives his brother-in-law a little lunch--meat. Takes it to his sister after quitting time. All those things. Then when that's over, then that breakfast goes out--the dishes goes out. And then the drum's untied. Marbles in that drum. The rope coiled (up) nice. The buckskin (drum cover) wrung out--you know, they have water in that drum. And the kettle and rope and marbles--those stones--they're put back in there and the whistle--that eagle bone whistle. And the drumsticks are put in there and the Fire Man gets up and comes around there and picks that drum pot. (iron kettle,