

And I didn't know there was a thunder and all those...)

Well, I don't know this. They belong to something to do with the weather. To do with the weather, but I don't know anything about it. There's this boy, Junior Pratt, he's dead now, he died in Colorado. They buried him out there. And when there's big storms comin' out, they call him, his name was Cedar in Indian. How you say cedar? Can't remember...anyway, she'd call him and just "Cedar doctor". She couldn't, you see, she don't belong to that.

(Would that stop...)

Her children did...

(That was to stop the weather goin' like it was...?)

Yeah. But my goodness, she used to cry all day when that storm...he just gets hysterical, he just hollers, and (unin.)...So he's supposed to be something about the weather, you know. And he's not supposed to be afraid of it.

(laughter) The only thing I'm afraid of is that big pecan tree. You know, on my little house it would tear it down.

(When did you move in to camp?)

Down here, now let me see...Herman started to school, and he's 24 now...How old would that be ?

(When he started to school?)

He had just started to school.

(Probably 6, about 18 years ago.)

Ummm, yeah.

(You've lived in town that long?)

Uh-huh. I've lived here with the folks.

(Oh, I thought you said he went to Mound Valley.)

He did. He just never did change, you know. Oh, but we were out in home, and we still do that. Sudnay he said, Moma, I'll go out there and mow the
