

from Broxton--just follow that road--it's not open, but next mile--on that same road's where he used to live--on the creek.

(Did he have any children?)

No, he didn't have any children. He had a wife and his wife had some grandchildren--.

STORY OF THE THREE KIOWA SCHOOL BOYS WHO FROZE TO DEATH:

(What was his wife's name?)

toqu.ya Well, his wife's siter's grandson, was the one that froze to death in 1892 on this little mountain right over here--you heard about the boys frozen to death that run away from school? Selah (or Sailor) was the boy's name. S a i l o r. And this boy, Sailor's father, was a school truant officer at Kiowa school; that was right here where we are--on the creek right there--

Well, we would say Eagle Heart--Eagle Heart Spring is just over the hill there. And the creek is the Cache Creek. Originally it was the Cache Creek. And that's where the--It was in cold weather, 1892, and the snow was heavy, and the way it happened, this boy was going to school at the Kiowa School. They didn't have no highways, but they had a trail running from El Reno to Anadarko and going out to Greer County. Comes right through here. And they was following that road. And the way my brother-in-law, Edward Yegoo, told me, that they was camped at west of Anadarko in that valley right where Randlett Park is in Anadarko--in that bottom next to the river end--there was always a big camp there. And these boys, I guess, got a whipping and run off from the Kiowa School that was straight north--about a mile north--of Randlett Park, just straight across from where Riverside school is now. That's where the Kiowa School used to stand. I been over there. I told you about my first Thanksgiving--that's where I had it. My first Thanksgiving dinner. Well, these boys came to that camp about noon. And Edward told me, "We played together with those boys--
