

couple of years--the Board let him teach school--in come his family. And he had a grown girl and a grown boy, both bright, and I don't know--two smaller children. And Boy, he had killed a man in Iowa and skipped out and follered him. My dad said, "There's something wrong." And when that family come in there, it wasn't long till they left there and I never did know what became of 'em and I don't think anybody else did or not. But the tale follered him. He had killed a man in Iowa. That new home, they call it down here south of Peggs (not clear)--went to school there. George Bailey was first teacher. We lived right close to 'em when (not clear)--

(Exactly where?)

I reckon--I explain it--I reckon Dr. Bill (not clear)--and then a fellow by the name of Stevens brought Dr. Cody. And that cyclone killed Stevens.

(The one that went right through Peggs, there?)

Yeah.

CONCERNING THE PEGGS CYCLONE

(Now when Elizabeth died, Mr. Baylor--he was tough wasn't he?)

I expect he was (not clear) He was a fine doctor.

(Yes he was.)

They respect each other. I'd forgot all about Ben Sloan and old George Baylor was a fine old Indian. It blowed his house and everything he had away. And he had a baby was borned right in that big storm.

(My goodness. Well, that Peggs cyclone was almost complete. Took everything nearly and left--what was it--two buildings standing?)

I believe it was. I know the Forrest boy was killed, we knowed him. And I know there was eight others. But we got ready and went to see them but we didn't get there. 'Course everything he had was blowed away and the house was falling to pieces. And a woman and a baby was killed in that house. But they was all saved. (name not clear)--was crippled a little. And the ceiling
