

an early missionary tried to start church work among the Indians. His name was J. J. Methvin. And the government started a school for the Kiowas. Called it Kiowa School. You been to Anadarko, Riverside Indian School?

(Yeah, uh-huh.)

Well, this Kiowa School was located right across from the Riverside School. That was--it was on the Washita River--run this way and then it bends over. Well, where the Washita bends, the Riverside School is there and then across was where the Kiowa School was. And a mile to Anadarko, the present town, on the east. The old Kiowas' School was located there. Well, this Mission's school Methvin's. After the government started this school, Methvin started a mission school. And that was the story that the lady wanted for mission work and I wrote out a little outline for her. That's one of the papers you've got there. You said you'd write it for me. She wrote to me again. She wants me to send it to her. I got a letter from her day before yesterday. And I haven't wrote to her yet. I'm just waiting. Well, anyway, Methvin got the mission board to let him have money so he established a mission school. And he started--the government to let him have land to build a mission school for Indians. He built a large mission school and that's where I went to school. I attended that mission school. 1890 when he started the school. That's before the country opened.

MORE ABOUT BOINADLE

And Boinadle, after he had been grown, here with the Kiowas, he went back north in Kansas or somewhere. I don't know where he went. But I didn't hear where he went or what he done. But he
