

Mr. Thompson: I remember Bud Springs. You remember him?

Mrs. Oaks: Bud, yes. He lives here now. No, Bud don't. Bud died, his widow still living here now.

(I think I had mentioned Judge Hunter or Tom Hunter, you know, and somebody mentioned him as a speaker and Mr. Henderson said that Bailey Springs was quite an orator.)

He sure was. Tom Hunter was a good speaker too, of course, he wasn't an orator, but he was a good speaker.

(Was Tom Hunter chief?)

No. He never was chief. He - I know when I was just a kid he run for chief one time. I think maybe he was running against either Green McCurtain or Governor Dukes, I believe it was Governor Dukes. You remember when - I guess you old enough. How old are you?

Mr. Thompson: Seventy-seven.

Well, we're about the same age. Yeah, you remember it. Of course we was small. But I know Tom Hunter was campaigning. Tom lives over about only over there. He came to my father's house and stayed all night in a buggy - two horse buggy. Just left his buggy out in the yard there and took the horses on to the barn. Well, the next morning I was up pretty early, foolin' around there about the buggy - saw a box of cigars there - I just reached in and got me a couple of them. Went off and hid 'em. ((laughter)) Anyway he was campaigning out running for governor - but he didn't make it. He probably was elect all right, but they counted him out of it, some figured he did.

VOTING AND ABOUT THE CHOCTAW COUNCIL HOUSE

(Who did the counting at that time?)

I couldn't tell you.

(I mean was it just a head vote did the Choctaws gather some place for the election?)
