

pletely out of our vocabulary. There will be no consideration for termination for any tribes. But it's just termination by individuals, is what we are working for, so that individuals can determine what they want to be and where they want to go, and that no Indians will fear termination again. He also set out some 1-2-3 plans that can be carried out. He created this Council Council for Indian Opportunity and under this council he has asked all the secretaries of all the departments, secretary of labor public work, Secretary Cohen of Welfare and Education, all these people are all working in their departments to overcome the problems. So you in this community with your Indian population should get together and what you know needs are, and in your educational system, now you can go to the Department of Education and ask for specific programs, you can get together and find out what your needs are on specific different type of training. There's all types of things now you can take advantage of the - through the Labor Department, because of the President's new approach to help the Indian make his own determination, and that the Indian really is not the sole priority of the Indian Bureau, that all departments of the federal government should be interested in. But as I sit in this meeting, it is very interesting - one of the most important men there, I didn't know, was a person I was supposed to help influence in his approaches to Indians. I didn't know enough to figure him out. It's interesting about his attitudes. He said, "I just can't understand what Indians want. What do they want? What do they want?" Here is a man who is head of a big department in the federal government which handles education. He had no concept of the problems that Indian children have. For instance, like myself growing up where Comanche is spoken at home, through my grandparents were progressive, they had their own theories in their local community, but the Comanche language was spoken at home and so it is very difficult sometimes
