

wrong with me--something. And he took and X-ray, 25 different pictures. And they couldn't read it, and they had to send to McAlister to Doctor that's on Board--I forgot now what his name was. And he come looked over, and I heard him say that--there ain't nothin' wrong with him at all--not a thing. They--the pictures don't show nothin'. And he went back to the office, discharged me, and didn't tell me, and I stayed there all day. Nurse came in, "Oh, I thought you was gone." I said, "I wish I was gone because I want to go home." And she said, "Why Doctor discharged you this morning." "Well, he might have done that, but he didn't tell me." So I came home, and that's the end of that, but when I told some of the doctors prior to that time of my chills. "Now, I'll tell you what it is--it's chills that I've had ever since my childhood almost--I don't know what it is--it's malaria, malaria chill." And I told doctor that I don't have anything but chills, and then because I had feyer, he double dosed all my medicine, penicillin. I knew I got allergic to that some time prior to that. And I told him, I said, "Doctor, I am allergic to that, you've better give me somethin' counteract that." "Oh, no, you're all right." He gave me a double dose. He told me that. "I'm goin' give you a double dose in shots." And, by George, in 30 minutes I was gone--(laughter)--I didn't know nothin', not a thing. It scared him and my wife both, and they got an ambulance. I don't remember leaving home at all. When I come to I was this side of Talihina. We was goin' by Albion, I believe at that time. And I looked up and saw it was an ambulance and I said, "Where am I?" My wife said you're way up there near Talihina, you'll be better? I said, "Well, I don't know...I'm wet." And I was just soaking wet--not a thread on me... And so when we got there, my mind comin' back regular. They had everything ready and they brought round in back. Had the wheel chair and everything else right where you take
