

the other day I saw--you was talking about children now. One of my neighbors's husband had grey eyes and she has light blue. She has one child that has a brownish--brownest looking eye as you ever saw. Now that happens, one time in ten thousand. Maybe they wouldn't be any, you know, there wouldn't be any discussion about it ordinarily. But I couldn't help but be kinds, you know it kind of amazes me. Mr. Dawes and my own father were cousins and he started to send him to school. And he said the school is run by a cousin of ours. That was in Macon, Georgia. And it turned out that most of one branch, I guess the side that was connected with my father, my own father, I guess they did come from Georgia. Before that they came from Virginia, I think, or Carolina, you know, North Carolina, Virginia and up in that way. But the Dawes' now, there are a lot of Dawes' in Pennsylvania. I never could understand how any of my people could be yankees. (laughter) It just doesn't seem like it's possible, but I guess it is. (next several words not clear) --was Indian. And what was that--Curtis was an Indian and they's just lots of them that have Indian blood, but we probably don't hear about maybe. But I think they should bring things like that out. And of course, I don't know how.

HOW THE CREEK PEOPLE ASSISTED GEORGE WASHINGTON DURING THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR

What are the Colonial Dames, anyway? (much static on tape for several words) Our Chiefs met with Washington and he was going to give up and they said, "Why"? One of the Chief's said "Why?". He said "Why"? "Because my men have no clothes, no shoes for their feet; they're bleeding, their feet are bleeding, they're frost-bitten, we have no food." "Is that all?" He said. This Indian said, "Is that all?" Why he said, "It didn't amount to too much. It wasn't an obstacle at all they could surmount that you know. That could be done away with. They go back and they tell the squaws to make shoes for their feet, winter moccasins, were fur-lined, you know--had resin rubbed on the bottom
