

Chinese babies, I'm not here. You could put the Indian baby next to the Chinese baby and you couldn't have told which is which to save your soul. Now there's something about it I don't know exactly what, but some of the words are like Indian words. Some of their words they may have a different meaning, but the phonics of them is exactly the same. I've often wondered about that. They were building this tower to Heaven--Tower of Babel; and God was displeased because his people would try to get to Heaven in such a manner. That wasn't his idea. And he thought Heaven should be earned. Different idea of obtaining Heaven than just to make a tower up there, so you know what happened. The Tower of Babel fell. And all the people started speaking in different tongues. Now do you believe that part?

(I do.)

You do? It's confusion they call it. Well, it's still causing confusion. Well, when these boys of ours went over to Vietnam, they couldn't hardly make these people understand what they were trying to get 'em to do. They didn't--they weren't prepared with English beforehand and they certainly weren't prepared with that language before they went over there. And they just had an awful time. That language barrier was a terrible thing. Don't you think there should be a Universal language taught? They didn't allow it.

(They didn't allow you to speak yours?)

My own father did not allow me--when I would visit my grandparents--you see my mother would tell me, now as a child it isn't nice for you to expect an older person that has lived so long and then have--

(End of Side A.)

(End of Interview)