

Shed room on the north side for kitchen and dining room together. Two rooms about 14 X 14, rooms with a fireplace.

(What color was it?)

Oh, they early days they didn't have much paint but they painted them light blue.

(Light blue!)

Light blue, sky blue, something like this. This green and blue, light blue about like that.

(That's--speaking of the houses and painting the houses just reminded me--)

Yeah I draw you a picture--I draw you some like that. Maybe you got a better pencil. Give me your pencil, this pencil don't write. That's the way it was. That's the roof. And it had a chimney right in the middle. Right there. And the addition was on the north side, like this. That shed, on the north side. And there was a door on the east side. And there was windows, wondows on the north side, and I don't know how you put a window on the north side, but it be about here, you might say. And there was window in this shed room on the north. And there was another door on that shed. Went in this room.

HUMOROUS STORY CONCERNING HAITSIKI AND GRANDSON

(Were all the houses that they built for the chiefs, like this?)

All exact same pattern. They had a shed on the north side. Well, some of those didn't have sheds on the north side. They had sheds on the south side. Well, Stumbling Bear's shed was on the south side. And Haitsiki's (?) was on the south side too, I think. (Kiowa words)

(Mrs. Curley: Who was Haitsiki? Was he a Kiowa?)

Oh, Haitsiki was Governor's father-in-law. I tell you how it was.
