

(I'll check with that.)

You check with that and you might find it in there. But, he's bound to have about two wives. It's natural for every Indian to have two wives. Must have, I don't know, I don't know. (Laughter)

(In Battey's book, "Quaker Among the Indians," just before the last, just before Batty leaves, he said Kickingbird had a young son named John, this would have been about 1874.)

Had a son?

(Uh huh.)

(Mrs. Curley: Named John, his name John.)

(Kiowa words.)

(Mrs. Curley: Yeah, he thinks about 1874 he had a son named John, about a year old.)

Well, you might find it in those early day census. I don't know. You go to Mary Lacy in Anadarko, she might find it for you. Sometimes I go over there to find out old records. Them old time census and annuity rolls. I don't know how far she got them, I think they sent lot of those old files moved to Dallas. But they have quite a few of them there yet. They have to have them to--I about forgot. I been fooling around with church work and other things. I'm going to brush up again this fall, this winter for history. Get ready for Mrs. Jordan, when she comes around here and gets lots of information and pays me. They always pay me. I save up for her. I got a letter from Wade Head.

(Mrs. Curley: You did? Where's he at?)

(Got another question. What's this Aut-mah mean?)

(Mrs. Curley: "Cry Baby" or "Cry Girl".

"Cry Woman."

(Really!)
