

Comin' back, I stopped there and I said, "Aunt Mary you got any tobacco?" Said, "Yeah." Said, "That's first you ever asked me for tobacco." I said, "Gimme a piece of tobacco about that long." And she cut 'er off and give it to me. I said, "I just ain't got any." And so he'd looked ever where for tobacco and I come up there. Boy she was settin' there. Had towels up there, you know. It was pitiful to look at that woman. And so I went up there. I done what my grandmother told me. I still remembered the words--it was mostly a song. And I done what she said, just exactly. And so I took that tobacco over there and filled her up a pipe, you know. I said, "This one thing I want you to tell me," and I said, "I want the God's truth on that." I said, "If I am helping you, you tell me and if I'm not I want to know--to know that too. I don't want to be a chump around here, tll people I can do somethin' and can't." I said, "That's not my line." And so she stuck that pipe in her mouth and away she went on it. She was settin' there and directly she busted out and went to laughin'. It was a miracle the way it happened. And so, Boy, she said, "I never felt better in my life." My wife was with me she said, "Boy what a nice feeling I'm gettin'." She smoked that up and she said, "Put some more in it. Gimme some more that stuff." So, I just filled her pipe back and she took about three puffs and I seen her eyes go this way. And she jumped up and she said, "Give me air, gimme air." And went to fightin' for air and they caught her and they laid her down on the bed and she went to vomiting, both ends went to sounding. (Laughter) I told my wife, said, "Let's go home. That woman'll kill me when she--(laughter)." And the first time--we went over there next day, I was afraid to go over there. We waited that day and the next and that night. The next evening we walked over there across the field. And she was laying there in a chair. She saw me coming. She come to the door and she said, "You go back. I don't want you here." That kinda scared me. They she commenced
