

Yeah. Her and my daddy. And my aunt--'course, my mother and daddy helped my aunt fix her windbreak. They don't make it little, though. They kinda make it way off from the tipi so they have 'nuff room.

(Did you make one every year?)

Well, they don't make 'em every year. Just when they think it's old and begin breaking. They take 'em down and they put new one on it.

(Back there did they used to leave their tipis in the same place for a long time?)

Yes, they do. (Every winter you'd be in the same place?) Yeah. (And using that same windbreak?) Same windbreak, yeah. Unless, when they think they're gonna move somewheres. Some, they don't move, though. They stay one place 'cause they got everthing fixed up good and they have to stay there.

LOCATION OF KIOWA-APACHE CAMPS

(This was down around Anadarko?)

Yeah. Us, we're 'round west of Ft. Cobb all the time. And most of the time--lot of people--well, we camp around Anadarko lots, too, but not all the time. We go back home. Then we go back Anadarko--see we get ration and stuff like that--we go for that. But we camp 'round there for long time.

(Where were the other Apaches camped?)

They do camp 'round there. They're camped, too, and when they think they ought to go home, they always go home.

(Were there some other Apaches camped somewhere else?)

'Round Boone. Long time they used to camp down there, 'round Boone all the time.

And us, we're 'round west of Ft. Cobb all the time.

(Who were some of the people that camped at Boone all the time?)

Well, they're all dead now, them people. There was--you know Houston?--Klinekole's folks--his mother and them, they used to camp 'round there all the time. And Blackbear--you know Ray Blackbear's grandpa--they camp 'round there. And Sontay (sɔ̃.təh) and there's lot of Apaches round there. They camp round there at Boone.
