

was some cotton the front porch when the old house the old shelter still had the charcoal on, why they went around and said, the house is on a fire. So Grandma come on round and they got it put out. And when she went back to look for Grandad, they had turned him over and stabbed him. Wasn't satisfied just killin' him, so that was in 1863. See my mother was just eight years old when that happened. So then her daddy then took'em all back to Pennsylvania and bought her a little home there. So then they come back in '67 and Mama got married why they were gonna move and grandmother said, I'm goin with you" and papa said "Well mother, if you're gonna do that why we'll just stay" So when she died in 1904, Mama bought the heirs out. So this is my mother's allotment. And I said "here is where all of was born and here is where old Hattie is gonna stay." I have one sister lives at Muskogee see and one time we went and got her.

(October 28, that's when your Grandad Nave was killed.)

Uh-huh, in '63, then brother Herb in '48 on October 28 died that night.

(The 17 year old Nave boy. Which one was he?)

That was a Meggs honey.

(I mean the Meggs)

That was Robert, that's Billy Meggs' father. Uh-huh. Yeah. See he was a half brother y'see and he was just not quite four years old when his daddy had pulled out on that gold run and left Grandma with five children and there's Nettie that married the Lyons, why she was a little over two years old. He knew that her daddy'd look after her, so there y'are. Someone said it was foul play, but the said though it was cholera and I read someplace that they just didn't know. Then two years later 1852, it was when Grandmother married Andrew Meggs, Mama's first cousin, her first cousin. And so that was, so, I said then after all kin it was in our family too. So as I said though
