

NOTE: This tape is continued on T-110.

STORY ABOUT CHIBATO, A FAMOUS MEDICINE MAN WHO INTRODUCED PEYOTE

Cecil: Now, this Chibato, the medicine man, was doctoring one of the Kiowas named-- What was his name?

Jenny: Kaulity

Cecil: Joshua Kaulity and this Chibato, the medicine man was doctoring because that this Kaulity has went out of his mind (speaks Kiowa) He was under the influence of this peyote and went out of his mind. Finally when they got this Chibato, the Apache and Comanche doctor, well, he got him all right back to his mind. And we don't know just how he done it, but that was his way of doctoring that man. And any time when they have a hard case of any kind of sickness, why, this man Chibato was called to doctor the patient--would you call it? And there were other doctors among the Kiowas, but this man is noted to be a good doctor. And in his doctoring, sometimes he gets a gift of a good horse or beef to kill for his family. Chibato was known as a great warrior and medicine man and a peyote leader among the Comanches. He has a good family. One of his sons has become a leader--chief among the Comanche tribe. He has made a trip to Washington in a big business matter. His name was Jim Chibato. What is that other one, you know, he's living yet? (speaking to Jenny)

Jenny: I don't even know his name.

Cecil: I don't know. He has another son that's living today. I'd like to say that they are the ones -- Binero (also known as Dinero) and his brother Chibato--who brought this, what we call peyote religion among the Kiowas and Apaches. The first ones.