

they were so this little one said, "Run for your lives." He said, "That Sainday's killing us." They got away. Some of them got away. But he got lots of them so he gathered them. And then there was a big tree and under that shade, you know, built a fire and then he cooked. He put on that--he put a lot of big wood on there in that hole. And all the wood all burned. Well, he put them in there and then he put some more coal on top. That cooked them, you know, kind of roast them or something like that. So he sat down. He was so happy. He was just singing away. He said, "That's the way I am to get something to eat." He said, "I cheat. I cheat people. That's the way I do to get by." He was happy, so happy. So when later he look at the meat and they were all cooked now. All the hide was burned off and the meat was cooked. So he got up and cut some of the leaves, the leave you know, and spread them on the ground and then took them and put them down so they could cool off. They were too hot. And he didn't know. Well, he was so happy that he done this. I guess he climbed up on the tree to wait until that meat cooled off. And he said, he talked to that tree. He sat on the-- it was a forked tree. And he sat and he said, "Tree, twist around." And when that tree obey him and twist around and he laugh and just having fun up there. And he said, "Untwist me now." It untwist. So he kept doing that and then when little bird fly in he said, "Sainday, would you give me a little piece of your meat?" He said, "No, get away. Leave me alone!" So this bird flew away and then, I guess when the bird left, he told all kinds of birds that Sainday had plenty of meat over there ready to eat. It's all cooked. And so when this tree, he told this tree to twist him and it did. It caught him good where he couldn't get off, you know. And then
